second optical system including from the image display element sequentially a first lens array having a plurality of first micro lenses periodically arranged in vertical direction and a second lens array having a plurality of second micro lenses periodically arranged in horizontal direction wherein the optical characteristics in the vertical direction of the first lens array is different from the optical characteristics in the horizontal direction of the second lens array. The image display element switches between a first and second synthesized parallax images, (with these synthesized images explicitly stated in the claims), and the aperture sections and light shielding section of the mask member are changed in synchronism with the switching of the first and second synthesized images.
